

Editorial

The present newsletter shows the wide range of scientific fields needed for the successful application of asteroseismology to short-period variables. We require excellent observational data as well as the latest models of stellar structure and atmospheres. Another major effort in the field concerns reliable mode identifications and the comparison of the results given by different approaches. The papers in this issue cover all those fields: we trust that you will find these stimulating.

Michel Breger
Editor