

Contents

Introduction: education and fertility in low-fertility settings	1
Tomáš Sobotka, Éva Beaujouan and Jan Van Bavel

Demographic Debate

The future fertility of highly educated women: the role of educational composition shifts and labor market barriers	19
Alícia Adserà

Education empowers women to reach their personal fertility target, regardless of what the target is	27
Wolfgang Lutz

Will highly educated women have more children in the future? Looking at reproductive plans and outcomes	33
Maria Rita Testa

What do men want? The growing importance of men's characteristics for fertility	41
Jan Van Bavel

Will highly educated women have more children in the future? In Southern Europe, it will largely depend on labour market conditions . .	49
Diego Ramiro-Fariñas, Francisco J. Viciano-Fernández and Víctor Montañés Cobo

Education, gender revolution, and fertility recovery	55
Gøsta Esping-Andersen

Review Article

Education and fertility in the context of rising inequality	63
Alícia Adserà

Refereed Articles

Cross-national differences in the association between educational attainment and completed fertility. Do welfare regimes matter?	95
Eva-Maria Merz and Aart C. Liefbroer

The role of values and of socioeconomic status in the education-fertility link among men and women	121
Martin Lakomý
Pathways to marital and non-marital first birth: the role of his and her education	143
Alessandra Trimarchi and Jan Van Bavel
Differences in partnership and marital status at first birth by women's and their partners' education: evidence from Britain 1991–2012	181
Nitzan Peri-Rotem and Jacqueline Scott
Do different educational pairings lead to different fertility outcomes? A cohort perspective for the Greek case	215
Christos Bagavos
Educational field and fertility in western Germany: an analysis of women born between 1955 and 1959	239
Anja Oppermann
Fertility and education among British Asian women: a success story of social mobility?	269
Sylvie Dubuc
The educational gradient of fertility intentions: a meta-analysis of European studies	293
Maria Rita Testa and Fabian Stephany	